Two major players—
one team

MAHLE and IZUMI

MAHLE and IZUMI began their partnership 50 years ago. This cooperation progressed until MAHLE successfully acquired IZUMI in 2003.

1923: Founded by Tokichi Izumi

1938: Reorganized as IZUMI Automotive Industry Co., Ltd.

1968: Technical agreement with MAHLE on high-load forged aluminum pistons

1976: Technical agreement with MAHLE on general aluminum pistons

1988: Name changed to IZUMI Industries, Ltd. and listing of stock on Tokyo OTC market

1988: Capital participation by MAHLE

2001: Plant restructuring; head office functions (Administration, Controlling, Production Engineering, and Quality Assurance) integrated into the Tsuruoka plant

2002: Introduction of MAHLE technologies and quality management system

January 2003: Becomes 100% subsidiary of MAHLE

April 2003: Name changed to MAHLE IZUMI Corporation

April 2005: Name changed to MAHLE Engine Components Japan Corporation

2008: Establishment of MAHLE Trading Japan for IZUMI's aftermarket business

OE customers: MAHLE supplies a wide range of manufacturers through its IZUMI factories: Isuzu, Hino, Komatsu, Mitsubishi FUSO, UD Trucks, Kubota, Mitsubishi Heavy Industries, Mitsubishi Motors, Honda, Yanmar, Yamaha, Mazda, and Subaru

Packaging, hologram, and label

MAHLE SECURITY STRIP

Security strip

This new sealing strip provides additional security: it prevents inadvertent opening and shows instantly if the packaging has already been opened.

Unforgeable label

With product information, such as engine manufacturer, article number, etc.

MAHLE IZUMI pistons, kit sets, and engine parts are produced in the highest quality and precision and packed with care. Only if the packaging is undamaged and the security strip intact can you be sure that the described precision engine parts are made by MAHLE and therefore of MAHLE IZUMI quality.

When unpacking the goods and during further handling of the goods, be sure to treat them with care so that the sensitive precision parts are not damaged.

Beware of imitations

MAHLE IZUMI products are sold exclusively by our authorized distributors.
